

Research interests

My research is inspired by the question 'what determines our grammar and its variation across languages?'. Formulating our thoughts in sentences is for a large part restricted by the syntactic rules of the language we speak. Another force that shapes our sentences, however, is the packaging of information: what is the most important bit of information, and how do I convey that to my interlocutor? This interface between morphosyntax and pragmatics, and particularly the crosslinguistic variation in this area, keeps fascinating me.

Key research terms: comparative generative morphosyntax, information structure, Bantu languages, grammaticalisation, formal typology

Academic employment

- 2017-current University Lecturer at Leiden University
Project leader of NWO Vidi project 'Bantu Syntax and Information structure'
- 2016-2017 Lecturer on Linguistics at Harvard University
- 2011-2016 Research Associate at the University of Cambridge, on the ERC-funded project 'Rethinking Comparative Syntax' (PI Ian Roberts)
- 2012-2016 Research Fellow at Darwin College, Cambridge.
- 2009-2011 Post-doctoral researcher at the Royal Museum for Central Africa, Tervuren (Belgium), on the Interuniversity Attraction Pole 'Grammaticalization and (Inter)Subjectification'.

Education

- 2004-2009 Ph.D. at the Leiden University Centre for Linguistics; Ph.D. thesis 'Word order and information structure in Makhuwa-Enahara' (supervisors Lisa Cheng and Thilo Schadeberg).
- 2000-2004 M.A. in African linguistics at Leiden University; M.A. thesis 'Lusoga phonology'.
